

The British Law Centre's Diploma in English Law and Practical Legal Skills is organised by a charity based at the University of Cambridge, Faculty of Law. Its members include Lord Carnwath of the UK's Supreme Court. Its Academic Committee is presided over by Professor Richard Fentiman, Dean of the Faculty of Law at Cambridge University.

Participants of the Diploma course study core issues of English law (including contract law, tort, trusts and others) and build a portfolio of practical legal skills (including case management, legal writing, contract drafting, oral advocacy, debating, mooting, interview skills and others).

The Diploma is taught exclusively by native-speaking English lawyers, some of whom are permanently based at the WPIA UW and others of whom visit especially to teach on the course (inc. lecturers from Cambridge University and other leading UK Universities and international institutions). The course materials are prepared by experts in their respective fields, including academic staff from Cambridge University and other leading UK Universities.

The Diploma is aimed both at law students, practising lawyers and anyone who wishes to improve their English language and legal terminology. Whether you wish to practise as a lawyer or simply improve your written and spoken English whilst developing a range of other skills, the Diploma helps to make your career goals a reality.

The Diploma is well-recognised amongst legal employers and educational institutions. BLC graduates have already gone on to excel in a wide variety of professional ways, inter alia by working in most of the major international law firms and a variety of legal institutions, including the European Court of Justice. Equally, BLC graduates have gone on to study/teach at variety of illustrious Universities such as Cambridge, Oxford, Harvard or Yale.
